Preston was born in Mississippi in 1923, and his childhood was marked by poverty and racism. Despite these challenges, he showed a talent for art at an early age. When he was 18 years old, he was drafted into the army and sent to Europe to fight in World War II.

Preston's experiences during the war were both traumatic and transformative. He witnessed firsthand the horrors of combat, but he also found solace in his art. He began to draw and paint scenes from his surroundings, and his work won him recognition and praise from his fellow soldiers.

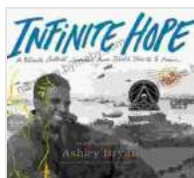

After the war, Preston returned to the United States and enrolled in the Art Institute of Chicago. He went on to become a successful artist, with his work being exhibited in galleries and museums around the world. He also taught art at several universities, and he was a mentor to many young artists.

Preston's memoir is not only a personal story, but also a historical record of the experiences of African Americans in the 20th century. He writes about the challenges he faced as a black man in a white-dominated world, and he offers a unique perspective on the civil rights movement and the Vietnam War.

But ultimately, Preston's memoir is a story of hope. He writes about the power of art to heal and inspire, and he offers a message of hope for a better future.

Black Artist's Journey from World War II to Peace is a must-read for anyone interested in African American history, art, or the power of the human spirit.
