From Dreamers to Trailblazers

The seeds of the Women With Silver Wings program were sown during World War II, when the United States faced a shortage of pilots. In 1942, the Women's Airforce Service Pilots (WASPs) was established, marking the first time women were allowed to fly military aircraft.

The WASPs underwent rigorous training, enduring the same challenges as their male counterparts. They flew over 60 million miles, towing targets, transporting cargo, and testing aircraft. Their contributions were instrumental in the war effort, liberating male pilots for combat duty.

Breaking Barriers and Blazing Trails

Despite their invaluable service, the WASPs faced immense prejudice and resistance. They were denied military status, paid less than male pilots, and subjected to scrutiny and skepticism.

Undeterred, the WASPs pressed on, proving their competence and courage time and again. Their determination paved the way for future generations of women in aviation, including those who served in the Korean and Vietnam Wars.

Inspiring Generations

The Women With Silver Wings left an enduring legacy in the world of aviation. Their story serves as an inspiration to young girls and women everywhere, reminding them that there are no limits to what they can achieve.

In 2020, the WASPs were finally awarded the Congressional Gold Medal, a long-overdue recognition of their service and sacrifices. This honor stands as a testament to their unwavering spirit and the transformative power of their contributions.

Unveiling Their Untold Stories

"The Women With Silver Wings," a captivating book by Katherine Sharp Landdeck, brings to light the extraordinary lives of these remarkable women. Through meticulous research and intimate interviews, Landdeck paints a vivid portrait of their challenges, triumphs, and enduring legacy.
