In addition to online databases, there are also a number of websites that can help you find information about your ancestors. These websites include:

- The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA)
- The Library of Congress
- The Family History Library
- The New York Public Library
- The Allen County Public Library

These websites provide access to a variety of resources, including census records, birth and death certificates, and military records. They can be a valuable resource for finding information about your ancestors.

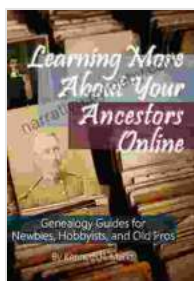

Tips and Tricks

Here are a few tips and tricks for getting the most out of your online ancestry research:

- Start with what you know. Before you start searching online, gather as much information as you can from your family members. This will help you narrow down your search and make it more efficient.
- Be patient. Finding your ancestors can take time and effort. Don't get discouraged if you don't find what you're looking for right away. Just keep searching and you'll eventually find the information you need.
- Be creative. Don't be afraid to think outside the box when you're searching for information about your ancestors. There are a number of different resources available online, so don't limit yourself to just one or two websites.

- Use social media. Social media can be a great way to connect with other people who are interested in genealogy. There are a number of genealogy groups on Facebook and Twitter, and you can also find people who are researching the same surnames as you.

Finding your ancestors online can be a rewarding and enriching experience. It's a way to learn more about your family's history and to connect with your roots. With the right tools and techniques, you can uncover the secrets of your past and build a stronger connection to your family.
